The Academy is situated in the pleasant village at Bethel Hill, near the Station of the Grand Trunk Railway. The quiet retirement of the village, and its beautiful and healthful location, afford the student an excellent opportunity for pursuing his studies pleasantly and successfully.

The school-rooms have recently been fitted up in a neat and commodious manner.

Good board and accommodations may be obtained near the Academy, at reasonable rates.

Also, rooms, for any wishing to board themselves.

CABINET.

The Cabinet contains an extensive and valuable collection of minerals, embracing many fine specimens from various parts of the world. Peculiar facilities are consequently afforded to those wishing to pursue Mineralogy as a branch of study.

LIBRARY.

A well-selected library, of several hundred volumes, belongs to the Literary Society connected with the Institution, from which books may be obtained weekly by the members of the school.

APPARATUS.

There is a good amount of Apparatus, such as Maps, Charts, Globes, Electrical Machine, Microscope, &c., together with a chemical apparatus sufficient to furnish the means of illustrating all the essential principles of both inorganic and organic chemistry.

Additions are made yearly to the apparatus from the appropriation of a fund allotted to that purpose.

RHETORICAL EXERCISES, AND LYCEUM.

A portion of Wednesday afternoon of each week is occupied in declamation by the gentlemen, and select reading by the ladies.

A flourishing Debating Society is also connected with the school, which holds weekly meetings for the discussion of questions, and for various other rhetorical exercises.

INSTRUCTION AND GOVERNMENT.

It is designed that the instruction shall be thorough and practical, fitting the student for transacting the every day business of life, for teaching, or for prosecuting with success those higher branches required in a liberal education. The government of the school will be mild, but firm; and of such a character as to lead to habits of promptness, method, industry, and order.
